Working with the Challenges in Youth Work
By Joanne Remy, LMSW

In runaway and homeless youth care settings, workers and youth often struggle with case management plans and the runaway and homeless youth's ability to utilize services. Young people often have limited, if not resistant, responses to the case management process and frequently exhibit behaviors that derail progress. This training will provide an overview of developmental issues, spheres of influence (such as peers and family) and basic needs which impact runaway and homeless adolescents' priorities and behavior at this stage of life. The training will provide participants with some guidance about how to work more effectively with runaway and homeless adolescents by incorporating these concepts into your work.
